Trade Unions in the Democratic Process

Date: November 22-24, 2011

Site: Göttingen, Germany

Organiser: Doctoral Scholarship Department of the Hans-Böckler Foundation, Göttingen Graduate School of Social Sciences

Topics: The conference will cover issues relating to the role and influence of trade unions within the framework of democratisation efforts and as the result of the radical changes and transformations which have and are still taking place in various political systems around the world. It will also consider the options available to trade unions in existing democracies to shape developments, particularly in light of the growing socio-economic problems and new challenges that they face in many of these democracies. The conference will focus on the initial situations, developments, processes and results of trade union influence in very different countries, regions and political frameworks. International comparisons and historical perspectives are also possible and desired. In particular, the conference will cover the following topics and issues: What functions do trade unions assume in democratisation and/or democracy stabilisation processes? In what way are trade unions political players in their operative frameworks and functions? How do they present themselves? What are the definitions and interpretations of democracy from a behaviour influencing perspective? How do the trade unions collaborate with their alliance partners in the democratic process? How do the trade unions' strategic concepts compare at an international level? What roles do trade unions play in repressive regimes? To what extent have trade unions adapted to changing work situations and demographic shifts (e.g. to the "internship generation" in industrial nations, migrants or the very young average age of many populations in the southern hemisphere)? What functions do trade unions assume in connection with the inclusion and integration of marginal set groups? What function do the ILO and other international trade union organisations assume in the above connection? What is the significance of transnational networks? What kind of a media presence do trade unions have in the democratic process?

Gender Paradoxes of Changing Academic and Scientific Organisation(s)

Date: October 20-21, 2011

Site: Örebro, Sweden

Organiser: The Center for Feminist Social Studies (CFS) Academy of Humanities, Education and Social Sciences Örebro University

Topics: The organizer invites abstract submissions for the conference from scholars at all career stages whose research addresses one or more of the following sub-themes: 1) The paradox of CHANGE: rapid "non-gendered" change, and gender inertia in academic and scientific organizations; gendering “non-gendered” change processes; gatekeepers promoting and preventing change. 2) The paradox of EXCELLENCE: gendering new and emerging stratifications of academic and scientific organizations, disciplines and professions; gender impact of different excellence programmes and initiatives; critical policy analyses of excellence promotion. 3) The paradox of INTERVENTIONS: gender dynamics of gender equality promotion, resistance and change in academic and scientific settings; gender equality change agents in science and academia; gender fatigue; gender impacts of seemingly non-gendered interventions such as reforms in governance, appointment, evaluation, funding or salary systems.

40th World Congress of the IIS: “After Western Hegemony: Social Science and its Publics”

Date: February 16-19, 2012

Site: Delhi, India

Organiser: International Institute of Sociology (IIS), Centre for the Study of Developing Societies (CSDS), Delhi, Swedish Collegium for Advanced Study (SCAS), Uppsala

Topics: The last decade of the 20th century and the first decade of the new century have witnessed world historical developments that point to the beginning of the end of what might be called the colonization of minds and cultures. Ideas and practices associated with the modern West have been critiqued for long, viewed with suspicion, and rejected, rightly or wrongly, in the past. But never before has the impact of this critique been profound enough to launch a transformation in the social and political imaginary of large numbers of people in the world. A new historical dynamics appears to have been set in motion and a space has emerged for new cultural and civilizational encounters. This may entail greatly increased potentials for equality between human beings in different regions of the world but perhaps also the emergence of new structures and spaces of hegemony. The beginning of the end of the hegemony of mainstream Western intellectual traditions may therefore be the right moment to reflect about the relationship of the social sciences to this transformation. How have the social sciences shown an awareness of adaptation to these world historical changes? Is social science still shot through with assumptions of Western modernities? To what extent, if any, may such assumptions still be justified and to what extent are they amenable to rethinking and rearticulation and to what extent will they have to be discarded?

Declining Political Trust, Disenchantment with Politics, and Methods of Political Participation

Date: January 25-27, 2012

Site: Cologne, Germany

Organiser: GESIS Leibniz-Institute for the Social Sciences

Topics: Over the last two decades, disenchantment with politics has become more noticeable around the globe as people feel a growing distance between governments and governed. When asked, some voters state that politicians do not listen to what the people want, causing many to turn away from politics in frustration. Others voice their opinions in the streets, protesting against political decisions, thus demonstrating that they want to have their say in politics – not just on Election Day. At the same time, public opinion surveys suggest that political trust is declining meaning that people are less and less confident in their governments and other political institutions. Is there a connection between trust in and disenchantment with politics as the public debate often suggests? If so, what are the reasons behind this development? The literature offers a variety of economic, social, cultural and political explanations for declining levels of trust; similar factors are usually mentioned when disenchantment with politics is concerned. Can we identify major driving factors from this potpourri of potential explanations? Are the same mechanisms at work in all affected countries? And if so, under which conditions might citizens re-invest trust into the political system? Taking into account the theoretical and practical relevance of political trust for modern democracies and the open questions that still remain after about 50 years of research, further work on the topic seems in order. The organizer encourages contributions addressing the questions raised above, or the meaning and transformation of the concept in different time periods or countries, or new ways of measuring trust. In particular the organizer suggests using the existing comparative data bases (such as CSES, EVS, Eurobarometer, ESS, ISSP). Manuscripts should cover either one country for more than one period of time, or compare several countries, or both.

The European Union in International Affairs III

Date: May 3-5, 2012

Site: Brussels, Belgium

Organiser: The Institute for European Studies at the Vrije Universiteit Brussel (IES-VUB), the Institut d'Études Européennes at the Université Libre de Bruxelles (IEE-ULB), the United Nations University Comparative Regional Integration Studies (UNU-CRIS), Egmont – the Royal Institute for International Relations

Topics: The multidisciplinary EUJA Conference will provide a forum for discussion and exchange of ideas among the growing number of scholars that take an interest in understanding the role of the EU in the world in diverse policy fields (including environment, energy, information society, freedom and security, finance, security and defence etc.). This includes the debate concerning the EU as an international actor and the dynamic interplay between the EU, its member states, other regions and external partners in a multipolar/multilateral world. It may include topical issues such as the European response to the upheavals in the broader Middle East, European foreign policy post-Lisbon, the external effects of the Eurozone crisis, the EU's role in global governance and the international implications of the return of nationalism as a political force on the European continent. Similarly, attention to the external implications of internal EU developments such as the push towards a (Digital) Single Market and creation of the space of freedom and security are welcomed. The EUJA Conference will be open to all relevant disciplines and sub-disciplines, including international and European law, international political economy, economics, political science, international relations and history. It will also continue to foster exchange between the scientific and the policy communities, especially through keynote addresses by senior policy makers and a number of policy-link events featuring academics as well as policy makers.

Nationalism and the City

Date: February 10-11, 2012

Site: Cambridge, UK

Organiser: The Centre for Research in the Arts, Social Sciences and Humanities (CRASSH), University of Cambridge

Topics: This conference will move to 're-centre' the urban in theories of nations and nationalism, facilitating a dialogue across disciplines to address the many layers of what has been described as 'the urban palimpsest'. A special emphasis will be placed on integrating the insights of those focused on dynamics in the city and those addressing the broader phenomenon of nationalism, to enliven debates on space, identity, and politics and to illuminate important convergences and contradictions, conjunctures and disjunctures. The task for researchers is as follows: how are we to conceptualize the role of cities/urban environments in the origins/ spread/ perpetuation/ undermining of nations and nationalism? The continuities and variations in urban forms across continents necessitates a global focus, and participants are encouraged to consider the transnational dimension of both 'the urban' and 'the nation' as sociological phenomena and cognitive categories. Suggested focal points include: Urbanization/modernization and the conditions of nationalism's emergence; Urban intellectual networks and the global diffusion of nationalism; Cities as battle-space and/or as sites for mobilization; National unity and the urban/rural 'divide'; The city as metaphor for nation; Globalizing cities, 'post-nationalism', and notions of urban reclamation; Cosmopolitanism, nationalism, and layers of belonging; Multiculturalism, heterogeneity and the urban; Disintegration, dystopia and 'spaces of alterity'.

Multi-level Governance and Partnership in EU Cohesion Policy

Date: November 29-30, 2011

Site: Vienna, Austria

Organiser: Institute for European Integration Research (EIF), Austrian Academy of Sciences

Topics: The first workshop organised as part of the Research Network will tackle the issues of multi-level governance and partnership in EU cohesion policy. The imposition of multi-level and horizontal cooperation in implementation of cohesion funding challenged the established patterns of interaction between the levels of government and the actors involved in regional policy delivery. The partnership principle has also been praised for its positive impact in terms of improvement of administrative capacity and favouring learning across organisational boundaries. In addition, effective multi-level governance mechanisms and horizontal partnership are also considered as crucial for purposeful and strategic use of the Structural Funds. Thus, EU cohesion policy is expected to become more results-oriented in 2014-2020 thanks to, among other measures, an emphasis on a place-based approach, a concept closely linked with multi-level governance and partnership. However, there are major barriers for the functioning of multi-level governance, such as reluctance of some national governments to allow the subnational actors to play a more important role; or lack of capacity at the regional level to actively take part in shaping and implementation of EU cohesion policy, particularly in countries with centralised and hierarchical administration systems. Likewise, as the ex-post evaluations of 2000-2006 period and the academic research to date suggest, the application of horizontal partnership varies considerably across the Member States and can remain superficial and 'formal.' Against this background the organizer proposes to address the following issues during the workshop: 1. Application of the multi-level governance and EU cohesion policy's partnership principle in the Member States; 2. Added value and spillover effects; 3. Enhancing multi-level governance and partnership.

Volunteering, Religion and Social Capital

Date: December 7-9, 2011

Site: Antwerp, Belgium

Organiser: University Centre Saint-Ignatius Antwerp (UCSIA)

Topics: This programme wants to investigate how the concept of volunteerism in faith-based organisations and congregational groups changed overtime and what motivates people today to become a volunteer; taking into account such trends as individualism, professionalization, secularisation, old and new types of solidarity, divers communities. The workshop welcomes researchers, doctoral students and other experts to share scholarly ideas, practices and ideas on Volunteering, religion and social capital. Such a conference may open up a new horizon for academics, students and policy makers to think about the topic. Presentations can summarize empirical research outcomes, but also historical, conceptual, methodological related contributions are welcomed for submission. The paper proposal should discuss one of the following subtopics: 1. Cultural and historical roots of volunteers/volunteering; 2. Resources of motivation and opportunities to become a volunteer; 3. Employees and professionalization of voluntary work; 4. Bridging and bonding social capital, (religious) volunteering and society.

The Millennium Goals and Beyond: Reflections on an international development policy agenda after 2015

Date: November 21-22, 2011

Site: Bonn, Germany

Organiser: German Development Institute / Deutsches Institut für Entwicklungspolitik (DIE)

Topics: The organizers are looking for original empirical and theoretical contributions that have implications for concrete policy recommendations in any of the four broad areas outlined below: 1. The necessity of a new global development agenda; 2. The content and purpose of a new global development agenda; 3. Measuring progress towards the goals; 4. The way towards a new consensus. Because of the multidimensional nature of deprivation and development, the organizers especially encourage submissions that build on concepts and established methodologies of different disciplines such as economics, political science, sociology, statistics and law.

Call for papers Journals

Journal of Gender and Justice

Place of publication: Varanasi, India

Published by/ edited by: Centre for women's Studies and Development, Banaras Hindu University

Topics: Journal of Gender and Justice invites contributors to consider broad themes such as women's roles in society, history, philosophy, and religion; gender and the media; women and work; gender, race and class; international development; gender and sexuality; women and politics; women and literature; gender and language; women and social change; women and the family; and gender and the arts. Gender Justice, simply put, refers to equality between the sexes. It is a correlation of social, economic, political, environmental, cultural and educational factors; these preconditions need to be satisfied for achieving gender justice. Globally, gender justice as a cause has gained in strength over the years, as it has been realized that no state can truly progress if half of its population is held back. The journal will seek to assess women's roles as depicted across disciplines and which impact our understanding of society and history and our actions, past and present, within local and global communities. Also this journal encourages ventures to incorporate gender perspective into reading/teaching/research/and everyday understanding that would not only broaden the scope of disciplines but also of the initiatives taken in the field of social justice.

Theoria: A Journal of Social and Political Theory. Special Issue on "Freedom and Power"

Type of publication: print/online

Published by/ edited by: Berghahn Journals in association with the Faculty of Humanities, Development and Social Sciences, University of KwaZulu-Natal, South Africa

Topics: Several important questions arise concerning freedom and power: What is freedom? What is the relationship between freedom and power? How, if at all, are freedom and domination related? Is there a categorical or insurmountable conflict between freedom and discipline? Does freedom depend upon being free from interference or being able to achieve certain desired or desirable goals or ends? Are these two conditions - freedom from interference and the ability or power to achieve certain ends - related in some sense? Can we measure freedom, and, if so, how? What forms or degrees of freedom are possible in modern representative democracies? How does representation affect freedom? Is our freedom dependent on the power of our representatives? How does the degradation of the planetary environment affect our views on freedom? Given the dire need for self-control and self-discipline, especially regarding levels of consumption in the developed North, is the concept of freedom even still relevant? Does the concept of freedom need to be reconfigured to accommodate constraint, austerity and self-control? If so, how? What do the experiences of relatively recently liberated states teach us about freedom? What is the relationship between freedom and power in the 'Global South'? How, if at all, does poverty affect freedom? The editors of Theoria ask contributors to think about these questions in and of themselves and in the light of the various arguments from any of the proponents of the various conceptions of freedom. These can be written about in term of furthering our understanding of the nature of personal and political freedom within modern representative democracies or in order to develop novel arguments that propose conceptions of freedom for different possible future political organizations and forms of power. The editors urge contributors to try and think about freedom and power within and between particular political contexts, especially within the 'Global South', where often freedom is a nascent and precarious achievement, and sometimes only for the lucky few, and between the 'Global South' and the 'Global North', either in relational or comparative terms. Given the changing power relations that exist within and between existing states, there is also much room for utopian thought regarding new forms of freedom in as yet un-experienced contexts of political power and moral conflict.

Call for papers Publications

Challenging Identity Normativity: Affirmative Social Identities, Empowerment Policies and Social Cohesion

Place of publication: Ljubljana, Slovenia

Type of publication: print/book

Publication date: June 2012

Published by/ edited by: Faculty for Social Work, University of Ljubljana

Topics: The focus of this call is to discuss those social identities which are devalued, ostracized and stigmatized and to look at the empowerment policies towards social cohesion, justice and inclusion. While identity politics has become an important topic in social sciences in so-called Western countries already in the late 1960ies, countries with state socialism, like former Yugoslavia, experienced a pre-defined normative identity formations and the invisibility of the identity politics from the perspective of the individual persons. During the collapse of state socialism, from the beginning of the ethnic conflicts and wars in former Yugoslavia, the issue of identity was primarily focused on the re/construction of the collective identity such as national identity, heroic identity, the mothers' of war veterans identity, the victim of war identity and similar. In the meantime, several others social identities became newly defined or visible for the first time (people with disabilities who demanded independent living; the "Erased" in Slovenia; people living in the same sex partnerships; parents who adopt children from other countries, women experiencing violence, working poor, unemployed workers from the mainstream society, migrant workers, illegal immigrants etc.). Many of above mentioned social identities have in the course of the transition from communism towards the neo-liberal global capitalism become viewed as the source of societal disintegration, pathologised and ostracized as the deviation from the normative identity of the collective identity of the national body and its parts. This construction of the internal »others« helped to construct seemingly ethnically, politically and socially homogeneous new states. Coming from that, the proposed (but not exclusive) topics of this call are: The particular contexts in which specific social identities become source of discrimination and conflicts; The manifestations of everyday hatred, including everyday racism; The common structure of social inequality, which is manifested in variety of ways: pathologisation, constructed invisibility, memory restrictions etc.; The everyday life experiences of people from their own perspective; The examples of the affirmative empowerment policies towards devalued and discriminated social identities; The involvement in policy work in order to change the oppressive environments. Proposed research questions include: What are some of the important new social identities and how are they defined in regard to the normative identity formations in the particular contexts? What are the normative forms of social exclusion and stigma related to particular social identities? What are the ways of developing the affirmative identities, what are the empowerment policies and inclusionary practices that are going to affect social cohesion?

Grants/Jobs/Internships

ESRC PhD Studentship: "Governing New Social Risks: the Case of Recent Child Policies in European Welfare States"

Institution/Organiser: School of Sociology, Social Policy and Social Work, Queen's University Belfast

Kind of support/work: studentship

Duration: three years

Site: Belfast, UK

Topics: Applications are invited for a fully funded + 3 ESRC studentship (three year PhD) on the topic of 'Governing New Social Risks: the Case of Recent Child Policies in European Welfare States.' The studentship will commence on October 1st 2011 under the supervision of Professor Mary Daly. The studentship is linked to the ESRC-funded project which is the UK part of an ORA scheme (Open Research Area for Europe for the Social Sciences). The UK project is therefore connected to projects in France, Germany and the Netherlands. It is intended that the studentship will focus on a theme of relevance to the main project. The main research project seeks to look behind the child-centred investment approaches that are now being widely adopted in Europe. In the UK the project is focused empirically on an analysis of a number of child-centred and parenting programmes, with the intention of finding out what is going on in these interventions, examining the opinions of participants, staff, funders and a range of decision makers and locating them in a wider social and political environment. As well as examining how programmes are functioning, the research project is especially interested in identifying the ambiguities in recent policies for children, e.g., the tension between helping and controlling families and the possibility that new social divides between different kinds of families are being generated. It will collect and analyse quantitative and qualitative data in order to deepen understanding of child-related intervention programmes and their functioning and use in contemporary times. Its cross-national comparative strategy is to take the themes we identify as common in each country and investigate whether and how they are operating in the others.

Eligibility: Applications are welcome from candidates with a minimum 2.1 undergraduate degree (or equivalent) in sociology, social policy or a related subject and an ESRC recognized research masters degree or equivalent programme of research training or relevant experience (or be in the process of completing such training). Preferably, students should have knowledge of parenting, family and child-related issues.

Referees for the Paris International Congress of Humanities and Social Sciences Research

Institution/Organiser: The Academic Committee of the Paris International Congress of Humanities and Social Sciences Research

Kind of support/work: job

Site: Paris, France

Topics: The Academic Committee of the Paris International Congress of Humanities and Social Sciences Research is looking for Referees willing to take part in the selection process. The Referees will be offered their registration fees. The role of a Referee comprises two parts. 1) Abstract Reviewing. Review 200 abstracts (200 words each) and, for each of them, provide the Committee with recommendations for acceptance or rejection. The abstract review is to be performed between 10 November and 15 December 2011. Meeting the deadline is critical. 2) Full Paper Refereeing. Referee the initial and the revised versions of up to 20 full papers. For each of them, provide, as necessary: suggestions for revision, motives for rejection, or recommendations for Acceptance. What is expected here is not only copy editing (correcting spelling, grammar, word usage, etc.), but also and overall content assessment (Is there a clear statement of the research question? Is the research method or approach relevant? Was it properly executed? Are there mistakes, unclarities, lacks or problems? Are the results consistent with the research design? ...). The refereeing process will take place from 10 March to 20 May 2012. Meeting the deadlines is critical.

Eligibility: Sound experience as a researcher; Experience as a referee; Familiarity with most specialties in disciplinary area, or with various areas of Humanities and Social Sciences research; Native English speaker or Bilingual French-English; Good command in the use of Microsoft Excel and Word, especially the Track Changes mode and the Insert Comment function of Word; Availability to perform the reviews within the abovementioned periods of time; Demonstrated reliability in meeting deadlines; Willingness to adapt to- and comply with the evaluation procedure in use in the Academic Committee.

Deadline: None. This is a standing announcement
